* Carlos: DO NOT hand this to Venus on Day 1. Day one is a firehose. Unlock this in Week 2, right after her first win* — when it reads as celebrating her, not auditing her. Introduction script is at the bottom of this file.

Why this is yours

The best lines you say on the phone, the email that makes someone reply, the reframe that turns a "let me think about it" into a paid invoice — those are your asset. This is where they live, with your name on them. The point isn't to extract what you know so someone can replace you. It's the opposite: you get credit and leverage, and you become the person who built the sales system here.

Three real reasons this helps you: – Faster. So you're not rewriting the same great answer twice. Save it once, reuse it forever. – Expert. So you become the one who trained the next hire — you're senior, not interchangeable. – Builder. So you're the person who built this sales machine, not just someone who works in it.

What to save (the good stuff — not everything)

Only the wins worth keeping: – Winning email replies — the message that got the reply or the "yes." – Objection responses that landed — what you said when someone hesitated and you turned it. – A short Loom (2–3 min) after a standout call — talk through what you did, while it's fresh. – A great quote that closed — what combo / framing worked.

Skip the routine stuff. Save the gold.

Where it lives

One folder, your name on it: Venus's Playbook/. Suggested simple structure:

```
Venus's Playbook/
├─ winning-emails.md      ← paste the replies that worked
├─ objection-wins.md      ← the reframes that landed
├─ standout-calls/        ← drop Loom links + a one-line note
├─ quotes-that-closed.md  ← the combos + framing that sold

The rhythm (a habit, not a project)

~5 minutes at the end of the day. Did something work today? Drop it in the folder. One line of context is enough ("client worried about price → I offered the half-wall tier + free proof → they booked the complete set"). That's it. Five minutes, then log off.

Where this leads (the payoff)

Once your voice is captured, we plug it into an AI assistant that drafts your follow-ups in your tone and queues your day — so the repetitive typing gets done for you and you spend your time on what only you can do: connect and close. That only works because you built the playbook first. Documenting now = your semi-automated sales engine later. One thing in sequence, not two.

Carlos: the Week-2 unlock script

Wait for a real win, then say something like:

"That call you just nailed — that's exactly the kind of thing worth saving. I want to start a folder that's literally YOUR playbook, with your name on it. Five minutes at the end of the day, drop in the emails and calls that worked. It means you're not rewriting the same great answer twice, you become the expert who trains whoever comes next, and honestly — you'll have built the sales system here, not just worked in it. Down the line we use it to draft your follow-ups in your own voice so the busywork does itself. Cool?"

Framing rules (non-negotiable — this protects the relationship): – It's HER playbook, an asset she owns — never "data we're collecting." – Celebrate, don't audit. Tie it to a win every time. – Keep it light: the good stuff, 5 minutes, her folder.

Pairs with: PNG-Weekly-Scorecard-and-30-Day-Checkpoint (the Cowork automation unlock is a 30-day pass reward) · PNG-Where-PNG-is-Going-Vision. Throughline: capture her voice as a gift, not a leash — prove the close, then automate it.
